Kangana questions why Hindu women face criticism for embracing their faith

Actress and BJP MP Kangana Ranaut has hit back at critics questioning her religious transformation, asking why Hindu women are singled out when they choose to embrace their faith more openly.

In an Instagram video shared on Monday, Ranaut said she was once a moderate Hindu but now wants to become what she called a "defined and awakened Hindu." She said the shift has drawn labels. "I was called a Sanghi. I was told it's BJP's ideology," she said, questioning why a personal spiritual transformation invites public scrutiny.

Ranaut argued that the Constitution guarantees everyone the freedom to adopt any ideology, secular or otherwise, and that Hindu women deserve the same freedom without judgment. "Why is that path closed for me? Why can't I walk on it?" she asked, adding that critics often bring up her past lifestyle choices to undermine her current beliefs. "Ten years ago, you used to party, you did this, you did everything," she said, challenging the logic of holding someone's past against their present transformation.

The actress also alleged that some Hindu women in the film industry had shifted their ideological positions after interactions with what she described as "Islamists," while those who move toward a stronger Hindu identity face open criticism, a claim she called an example of "double-minded thinking."

The video has reignited debate on social media, with opinions sharply divided. Ranaut, who has been increasingly vocal on religion and politics since entering Parliament, recently also referred to Gen Z protesters at Jantar Mantar as "gutter chap," remarks that had already drawn significant backlash.

Jennifer Winget shares unseen Haldi photos with William Ishmael

Weeks after her intimate white wedding in West Wales, actress Jennifer Winget is giving fans another peek into her pre-wedding celebrations, sharing unseen photographs from her haldi ceremony with husband William Ishmael.

The pictures show a radiant Jennifer in a floral green lehenga alongside William, who complemented her in a classic white sherwani. Close friends including actors Karan Wahi, Harleen Sethi and Sehban Azim were part of the intimate celebrations, with candid moments of laughter, dance and colour filling the frame. Harleen also shared her own set of pictures from the day, captioning them simply, "Yaari Dosti Haldi."

But it was Jennifer's caption that truly caught attention. "My haldi wasn't just a celebration, it was a room full of love. I must've done something really right in life to have earned each one of you," she wrote, thanking her friends for planning the day and standing by her through it all. The post went viral within hours, with fans flooding the comments with love.

Jennifer married Singapore-based businessman William Ishmael on July 16, 2026, in a private Christian ceremony in the UK. The couple had kept their relationship entirely out of the public eye before the wedding announcement. Jennifer was previously married to actor Karan Singh Grover from 2012 to 2014, after which she spent over a decade focused on her career before finding love again.

Karan Aujla gifts Maldives trip to runaway couple on India's Got Latent

Punjabi singer Karan Aujla gifted an all-expenses-paid Maldives vacation to a runaway couple during his guest appearance on Samay Raina's hit comedy talent show, India's Got Latent.

The heartwarming moments from the episode came after Samay Raina asked contestant Vijendra Rajak about his dream. To which the contestant replied that he wanted to visit the Maldives.

During the interaction, Rajak and his wife revealed that they had eloped and had tied the knot because their families did not approve of their relationship.

Moved by their story, Aujla, who was a special panelist alongside comedians Samay Raina, Tanmay Bhat, Gurleen Pannu and Rahul Dua, decided to gift them an all-expenses-paid trip to the Maldives. The singer's gesture stunned the couple.

Against the backdrop of soft sand, blue skies, and ocean views, the outfit naturally blends into its surroundings. The vibrant color palette enhances the tropical mood while reinforcing the season's most desirable beach fashion trends.
